OFF FOR BOYLAND.

Ho! All aboard! A traveler
Sets sail from Babyland!
Before my eyes there comes a blur;
But still I kiss my hand,
And try to smile as off he goes,
My bonny, winsome boy!
Yes, bon voyage! God only knows
How much I wish thee joy.

Oh! tell me, have you heard of him?
He wore a sailor's hat
All silver-corded round the brim,
And—stranger e'en than that—
A wondrous suit of navy blue,
With pockets deep and wide;
Oh! tell me, sailors, tell me true,
How fares he on the tide?

We've now no baby in the house;
'Twas but this very morn
He doffed his dainty, broidered blouse,
With skirts of snowy lawn;
And shook a mass of silken curls
From off his sunny brow;
They fretted him—"so like a girl's,"
Mamma can have them now.

He owned a brand-new pocket book,
But that he could not find;
A knife and string was all he took,
What did he leave behind?
A heap of books, with letters gay,
And here and there a toy;
I cannot pick them up to day,
My heart is with my boy.

Ho! Ship ahoy! At boyhood's town
Cast anchor strong and deep.
What! Tears upon this little gown,
Left for mamma to keep?
Weep not, but smile; for through the air
A merry message rings—
"Just sell it to the rag man there;
I've done with baby things!"

THE WINDS OF GOD.

Blow, soft spring wind!
Out of the amber west, when down the sky
The shadows slowly creep, and heaven's lit lamps
Speak evening nigh.
Fan with thy living breath the reusing earth,
And let thy voice tell to all drowsy hearts
The year's new breath.

Blow, summer wind!
When after days of drought and sullen heat,
Out of the hushed-up clouds there comes a sound
Like echoing feet.
While from the distance, borne on heavy wings,
The rain descending on the thirsty plain,
Its beauty flings.

Blow, autumn wind!
Out on the yellow woods and stubble lands,
Stir the brown brake and scatter the thistledown
With myriad hands.
Sleep after labor, after the moil rest;
By stress, and weakness, yea, by life and death
The world is blest.

Blow, winter wind!
Out o'er the tumbling sea roll cloud and mist;
Roar through bare branches, striking wizard notes
Where'er you list.
Driving the ships; and in and out of all
Working God's will—who, from the frozen seas,
Came at his call

Blow, breath divine!
Beyond the depths of the uncounted host,
Beyond the mystic circle of the sky,
Come, Holy Ghost!
Lo! hatred, blasphemy, and sin expire
To raise their devil-thrones amid the gloom,
Come, quenchless fire!
Yea! and the world is buried still in night,
And load and long thy watchmen warn in vain—
Come, living light!

Select Story.

BETWEEN THE TIDES.

A flawless day was the twenty-third of April in the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and seventy-nine. The regulation morning breezes had been lured into the poppy fields of Angel Island, and put to sleep by the narcotic kisses of Circe. And even the zephyrs—gentle pages to the erst-while brawlers—had been shut up in the weather clerk's signal box until 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Then the yachts came out and the zephyrs were released. It was not very good weather for sailing that the zephyrs made, though they blew till their rosy cheeks were like soap bubbles and the white sails were filled with scented breath. The lumbering schooners staggered in zigzag pathways, as if they meant to slice away the island noses with their dull prows; and, indeed, the yachts sailed scarcely any faster, only the little plungers made unchecked headway, running at their own sweet will, it seemed. The north harbor was dotted with sails. Everybody and everybody's wife and children and friends were out. So there was nothing strange about the mere presence of a young man and a young woman in a small rowboat amid the scene of lazy commerce and busy gayety. Certainly it was not strange, for there were a hundred other people out that afternoon in rowboats, to say nothing of the professional boatmen, the men with sculls and the rowing clubs. If the people on the yachts which they met noticed them, they doubtless viewed them with contempt, or else looked at them artistically, and thanked God for poverty and the picturesque.

As for the couple in the boat, they did not notice anything but each other—at least except as the young man found it necessary to change his direction in rowing to avoid being run down. After a while even this became unnecessary. They were rowing with the ebb tide, and after they had passed the newly finished bit of sea wall east of the old Meiggs wharf, the channel was comparatively clear. It was then about 3:30.

"Let us float," said the young man; "pretty soon the tide will turn; then we will turn."

"Very well, Tom," said the young woman.

Really, she was as yet a girl. She could not have been more than nineteen. Her figure was slight, but indicative of rare gracefulness. Her face was not pretty—that is, most would not think it pretty. Both mouth and nose were large. Her eyes were blue and held an odd look—half earnest, half careless—difficult to define, yet impossible to disregard. It was a striking face, almost fascinating, with a good face—a face in which heart showed first and intellect afterward.

The man was exteriorly commonplace. You might take a description at random from your scrap book of conventional current fiction, and it would be likely to do him more than justice. But what of that. She was "Laura" and he was "Tom."

They had been talking gayly ever since they left the landing at the foot of Washington street. When Tom spoke they had apparently reached some common and very satisfactory conclusion, for she looked very happy, and she said tenderly—for she had a sweet, low voice, tunable as a perfect bell or a wave sob:

"You will ask her to-morrow, Tom?"

"Yes, Laura, or to-night, if you like."

"She will look at you wild-eyed and perhaps scold you a bit."

"Oh, I am not afraid. How could I be with such a prize to gain?"

They had passed the point, the swimming beach, the Presidio; they were nearing the fort at the gate. A sudden twirl in the current twisted the bow of the boat sharply around. Tom had been leaning forward, the better to talk to Laura, the more easily to hold her hand, perhaps. As the boat shifted its direction, he instinctively reached for the oars. His hands touched the empty row-locks. The oars were gone. He looked around but they were nowhere to be seen. A cry of horror arose to his lips. Luckily he stilled it there. He looked quickly, furtively at his companion. She had seen and understood. He forced a laugh, and his companion was deceived by it.

"Then it was not so very bad?" she said, and the color came back to her cheeks.

"No, it is a good joke," he replied. "Only we will be out rather late. When the tide turns we will go back booming."

Really he had very little hope. His judgment told him that the tide had no yet turned, and unless it did turn almost instantly, the swift current would carry them out into the offing, and amid the breakers at the bar, where their frail boat would not live an instant. And then——. He could not swim a stroke. If he could, the distance to the shore was too far to make that of any use. If only they had a rudder they might run the boat ashore; but, unfortunately, they had been in time to secure only the very last, rudderless skiff. "Thank the fates it does not leak." "Does not leak?" He looked down, and saw that the regular bottom of the boat was covered with water to the depth of almost half a foot. When they had started away from the pier landing Tom had braced his feet against a broad cross-cleet, and Laura's stout boots rested on the same dry foothold. Until then neither had noticed the water.

Tom searched in the bottom of the boat for a bailing can. He could not find one. Laura moved so as to look into the little locker under the stern seat. There was no can there.

"What shall we do?" she said.

"I must bail with my hat," he replied slowly, as if thinking it out; "the water must come in very slowly; it is a long time since we left Washington street wharf." He looked at his watch; it was then past 4 and they were nearly opposite Fort Point. So far as they could see there was not a single sail in the offing. They looked back at the city. There were no outcoming tugs or steamers, or schooners even. Then they looked out through the gate and wondered.

There is an untranslatable poetic something about our Golden Gate that the sympathetic beholder, incoming or outgoing, or gazing upon it from any standpoint, never fails to realize—something which, perhaps, he acknowledges, but may never put into fitting phrases. Perhaps it is because it seems so to hold the keys of our California life that we may not dissociate it from either our history or our future. Perhaps it is because in looking at it one can never quite discern its big beyond, of weal or of woe, of sunshine or of tempest.

"We should never have had this sunset anywhere else, Laura," and Tom pointed to the declining sun, hanging without a cloud above the wilderness of waves. They looked back to the city, and all the western windows were aflame.

"I did not think there was so much gold in 'Frisco," said Tom.

"Oh, Tom, I don't want to die and leave it all," said Laura, tremblingly.

The dallying breeze had shaken off the spell. The air had grown suddenly chill. Far ahead they could see the ominous white of the careening swell, and along the shore they heard the dull boom of the surf. Lower and lower sank the white electric dazzle; buff, and pink and orange toning into narrow belts of opal. Right ahead rose the black Farallones, and as the sun still sank lower they stood in unbroken outline against the disk.

With his soft hat Tom made slow progress in bailing. Until then the water oozed in so slowly that danger from leakage had not alarmed him; until then, the current, too, had carried them along so gently that the danger of upsetting had not presented itself. But after they had passed the fort the motion of the waves changed, not suddenly but gradually until at last the boat was rocking like a cedar chip in the eddies of a mill race. And still the tide had not turned.

Ceasing his bailing for an instant, Tom thought he heard the sound of water trickling into the boat. Perhaps it was his instinct of danger and not his ears that warned him, for the waves were splashing against the outside, and the motion caused a constant lapping of the water within the boat. Tom made a careful examination and at last found a little hole through which the water poured in a fitful stream as the boat rocked from side to side.

"I must stop the leak," he said, "can you bail?"

The sun had set, and the flush was fading out of the western sky. Laura took one long look around. In all the waste of waters there was no moving object. If there had been a ship in sight she could have seen it, she thought, almost despairingly.

She began to bail as well as she could, with the felt hat, and in her cramped position. A long line of gray was coming up from the south.

"It is fog," said Tom, in a whisper.

Until he said, "It is fog," she did not realize the almost utter hopelessness of their position. Even if the tide should turn before they reached the bar, it would be impossible to protect themselves in a fog. For a moment she thought she should quite break down, the fate before them seemed so terrible. Tom had succeeded in stopping the leak, and had resumed bailing. To make that task easier, he had cut the brim from his hat. The fog was now all around them, and it was quite dark. They thought they heard the surf more distinctly.

"The tide has turned," said Tom.

And so it had, but just how they would be affected by the change they could not tell. Tom kept on bailing until the amount of water in the boat had materially decreased. They had not spoken to each other for some moments. At last Laura leaned forward. Her hand touched Tom's, and he took it in his own. That hand-clasp meant to them things unspeakable. Her hand was very cold, almost as cold as his own. In his pocket was a silk handkerchief; he handed it to her, and bade her tie it about her neck for he dared not rise to fasten it there himself. Then he took both her hands between his own, striving to keep them warm.

Laura was the first to speak, and her voice was quite firm, scarcely even sorrowful: "Tom, dear, I do not want to die; and yet death cannot take from us the boon of having died together."

"But we shall not d' now, Laura; I know we'll not. The was the ring of conviction in his tones. The profound resignation underlying her words had struck the right key in his own nature, and the thought of his first despairing mood made him almost angry. "But it's awfully hungry we are, my dear," were his next words.

"I'm shamed of you," said Laura, and she actually laughed. Tom laughed also.

When two persons in such a position can laugh, it is either "very brave" or "very shocking," according to the creed we first sucked and the "so forth" of our salad days.

The fog was all around them and neither could see the other's face. The fog was cold and from time to time Laura had shivered once or twice, audibly, though quite involuntarily, for she was a brave little woman. When the ripple of the young girl's laughter rang out amid the fog (above the boom of the surf, the far away barking of the sea lions on seal rocks, and the near, yet distant screams of the fog signal), and when his own laughter was smothered in the fog folds, Tom repeated: "But I am hungry, awfully——"

What he might have gone on to say is forever sealed. The next moment the boat struck something with great momentum, and that is all Laura remembered till she awoke in the queer little cabin of the Sarah Emma, brigantine, in-bound from Australia.

A woman's gentle face bent over her own in anxious, motherly regard and dear Tom sat on a locker behind the gangway, with glad tears in his eyes to see the color steal back to her cold cheeks.

"And now you must have a bit to eat," said the captain's wife, in hospitable accents.

But Laura shut her eyes, half maliciously, and murmured: "Give it to him please; he's always hungry."

"That's what you'll not dare to say when you become Mrs. Tom," said the young man, triumphantly; and as the matronly figure of the captain's wife disappeared in the shadow of the gangway, he kissed her shut eyes softly, and turned away.—Argonaut.

Thunderbolts.

So many accidents have occurred by lightning this summer, that it might be supposed people generally would now begin to observe those plain and obvious precautions which cannot safely be disregarded in a thunderstorm. Yet we find but little evidence of increased care in this direction. People will persist in seeking shelter under trees when a heavy thunder shower comes, and young women will persist in watching the lightning from the open windows at which they sit, and parents will insist on sending their children out in the heaviest electric storm of the season on errands of the least importance. The fatal results which often ensue, seem to convey no lesson except to the families whom they directly affect.

This ought not to be so. Every man, woman and child in the country ought to know better than to stand under a high tree in a thunder storm. Scores of persons who were alive last spring would probably be alive now if they had possessed this knowledge and acted on it. And why cannot people be made to understand that an open window is not a safe place from which to watch the weather on such occasions. Every season it proves to be a post of danger all over the country, and yet every year it seems to maintain its fascination for new victims. Again, several of the most peculiarly distressing accidents by lightning which have occurred during the present summer have happened to poor children engaged in untimely outdoor errands rands for their elders.

Another important factor in the frequency of lightning accidents is the ignorance or carelessness which prevails in the construction and adjustment of lightning rods. They are insulated when they ought not to be, and the connection with the earth is apt to be defective, if indeed the conductor itself is not broken somewhere alongside of the building. A house or barn thus endangered instead of protected is struck by lightning, and the owner declares that lightning rods do more hurt than good, and so they do if not properly applied.

How Peanuts are Prepared for Market.

Peanuts to be prepared for the market are placed in a large cylinder, from which they enter the brushes, where every nut receives fifteen feet of a brushing before it becomes free. Then they are dropped on an endless belt, passing along at the rate of four miles an hour. On each side of the belt stands girls, and as the nuts fall on the belt the girls with a quick motion of the hand, pick out all the poor looking nuts, allowing only the best to pass the crucible. Those that do pass drop into bags on the floor below. When the bag is filled it is sewed up and branded as "cocks," with the figure of the rooster branded on its sides. The peas caught up by the girls are thrown to one side, again picked over, the best singled out, bagged and branded as "ships." These are as fine a nut as the first for eating, but in shape and color do not compare with the "cocks." The third grade are branded as "eagles." These are picked out of the cullings of the "cocks" and "ships." The cullings that are left from the "eagles" are bagged, sent to the top story, and what little meat is in them is shaken out by a patent sheller. The nuts being shelled by this new process, the meat drops in bags below, free from dust or dirt of any kind, and is then shipped in 200 pound sacks to the North, where it is bought by the confectioners for the purpose of making taffy or peanut candy. It may be here stated that a peculiar kind of oil is extracted from the meat of the nut, and in this specialty a large trade is done among the wholesale druggists. There is nothing wasted, for even the shells are made useful. They are packed in sacks and sold to stable keepers for horse-bedding, and a very healthy bed they make. —Southern Farmer's Monthly.

Love-making in Chicago.

"I am very rich my darling," she said softly, punctuating her sentences with soft, warm kisses. "Already I have $100,000 worth of four per cents registered in my name, and when the leaves are turning red in the golden October days, and the fields are laughing in the rich abundance of a bountiful harvest, I shall cut off the coupons. And when papa dies he will leave me nearly $200,000 more. Yes, my sweetheart, I am a very happy girl," and a fair young head nestled confidingly on the shoulder of the strong limbed, hazel-eyed young man to whom this avowal was made. He looked tenderly down on the brown tresses and the invisible net that bound them to the fair forehead. Gently lifting the beautiful face to his, he pressed a passionate kiss on the full red lips that seemed only made for osculation.

Turning his head away, Herbert Ainsleigh appeared a moment to be wrapped in thought. Then kissing Miriam with a rich, warm, two-for-a-quarter kiss, he said: "Do you love me, Birdie?"

She gave answer by placing her white arms around his neck, and throwing herself madly on his shirt front.

"Do not bug so hard, darling, an' you love me, or my collar stud will raise a carbuncle on the back of my neck," he said in mellow tones.

"It is only the deep, passionate longing of my love, Herbert. It reeks not of carbuncles. But you are right. Too much pressure on the cervical vertebra will cause an exostosis. My professor of anatomy told me that."

"And we will be married in the fall, my sweet?"

"Yes, Herbert, in the rich, hazy, sensuous days of Indian summer, when the low note of the farmer's boy seeking the lost cow is heard as he sits on the vine-embowered stile and blasphemes until the fire fly leaves for a cooler spot. You must take all my money, Herbert; it must be yours to do as you will with it; to attain the glorious fame that awaits you; for I know that my love's name will some day be known through the length and breadth of the land. Surely you have an ambition?"

"I have," said Herbert, kissing her while she caught her breath.

"And you will not let any false pride stand in the way of using my money to attain the height you fain would reach?"

"No, darling, I will not. You say you have $100,000 in four per cents. It is enough. To-morrow I will act, and in less than a day my name will be as familiar throughout the world as that of England's proud Queen."

"Oh Herbert what will you do?"

"I shall purchase Maud S."

Two minutes later a human form fell with a dull thud on the front porch of the haughty pork-packer's residence. It was Herbert Ainsleigh. The old man had fired him out.—From "Hints to Parents" by Halstead M.

Dressy Women in Saratoga.

The lady at Congress hall with the one hundred and thirty nine dresses, is still astonishing the natives and the strangers two or three times a day, and finds her path a pleasant one. There is one prodigy here in the person of a dame who has not repeated her toilet once in three weeks, although arraying herself in two or three different dresses daily, and announces to her admiring satellites that she has no maid; that she would not trust one of them. The tales of her sixteen trunks and one room full of wardrobes and racks of her finery, are not half so astonishing as the fact of her having no neat-handed Phyllis to sort out and care for the innumerable bonnets and boots, gloves, fans, flowers, and furbelows that match with and accompany each toilet. It must be that my lady lies awake nights to plan the spectacle of the coming day and toils when others rest that she may surpass the rivals in her chosen cult. A Mrs. Greenway, of Baltimore, now reigns as the "diamond princess" of the season, setting herself ablaze from crown to girdle with her dazzling jewels, and making all the other diamond-wearers in a ball room pale and green with their lax admiration. Mrs. Astor's regalia is the only famous one that surpasses this Baltimore collection, and it would seem as if the lady had been in Sinbad's cave or in a shower of diamonds, so thickly do they cover her neck, arms and little finger. Besides all this glitter of precious stones the gossips credit her with possessing 365 dresses, a fact that is intensely mournful and truly heart-rending when it is remembered that a watering-place season hardly lasts over sixty days, and that three dresses a day for all that time will leave ninety-five gowns not worn.—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

Here are a few words which are frequently used without a proper notion of their meaning. "Quite" means wholly or entirely, but it is often employed in the sense of rather or considerably, as in the expressions 'quite a pretty girl' and 'quite a large number.' 'Tenor' is not seldom confounded with purport. The tenor of a document is its text or language, while its purport is the substance of it. 'Audience' is sometimes used instead of spectators. An audience is a body of hearers or listeners, and is not the right name to apply to a collection of people who go to see a horse race, walking match or other spectacle. A man may witness, however, not only what he hears. 'Literal' means word for word or accurate to the letter, and is applicable only to verbal statements. It is sometimes improperly used in the sense of entire or complete, as when it is said that a man is a literal wreck. Literal signifies the opposite of figuratively, but it is often loosely employed as if it were an equivalent expression. Thus it is said of a person who is badly mangled by the bursting of a boiler that he was 'literally blown to atoms,' when the writer in fact introduces the word, literally' to imply that he is over stating the case and resorting to the license of exaggeration.—Phila. Record.

One of the stories told about an enterprising citizen of Atlantic City is to the effect that he proposed to purchase a couple of birds from an itinerant merchant, inquiring: "I say, mister, how much do you ask for your broad-faced turkeys?"

"They are owls, Pat."

"Be jabers, an' I don't care how owld they are, fur it's a boarding house I kape."

THE PRESIDENT'S CONDITION.

The excessive heat and poisonous air at Washington, exercised such a debilitating influence upon the wounded President, that it was determined to remove him to Long Branch. At an early hour on Tuesday morning an express wagon was driven to the White House and in this the President was laid and conveyed to the railroad station. The Pennsylvania R. R. company had provided the handsome palace car formerly used by Col. Scott, and to this he was safely transferred and placed upon a spring bed. At precisely half past six o'clock the train, consisting of an engine, baggage car and three special palace cars started, on its journey. The President bore the moving very well, in fact his pulse decreased after leaving the White House. The journey was safely accomplished and at nine minutes past one o'clock the train rolled into Long Branch. From Washington to Baltimore the train ran at an average speed of about thirty miles an hour. After this the speed was increased, as it was found that there was no more vibration to the bed than when running more slowly. At every station along the road throngs of spectators stood with uncovered heads, eagerly and earnestly watching the car in which the President lay. A temporary track had been laid at Long Branch to the cottage which the Presidential party was to occupy, and the wounded man was carried from the car to the bedroom which had been prepared for him. After his arrival the President complained of fatigue and his pulse rose to 124, but he soon rallied, slept soundly and the fever caused by the excitement of travelling materially abated. On Wednesday morning his pulse had decreased to 106, and he seemed to be better in every way. The windows of the room in which he lies look out upon the ocean not more than 100 feet away, and the cool salt breezes keep the temperature at a comfortable height. It is hoped and believed that the bracing sea air will have a most invigorating effect, and the developments of the next few hours are awaited with the greatest anxiety. There can be no doubt that in the debilitating atmosphere of Washington, the President was slowly sinking, and that his life could not have been many days prolonged. He bore the fatigues of the journey even better than his physicians anticipated and they declared that he had actually improved while on the way. He is greatly emaciated and his face is thin and haggard. His eyes however, are bright and evidently take note of all that transpires. A detachment of Battery A. First Artillery will compose the military guard around the cottage.

The Boston Transcript sarcastically remarks that "it is a little curious, come to think of it, that all the best surgeons in the country are now editing New York papers."

The Press waxes impatient at the delay in prosecuting the delinquent county officers in Lycoming, and asks "who's afraid up there in Lycoming county? Why not cage the County Commissioners at once, and be done with it."

It is stated that, for the first time, the three State prisons paid their current expenses during the past three months. This is, if true, a most delectable condition of affairs and will be duly appreciated by tax-payers.

Why is it that the Democratic Standing Committee do not meet and elect a Chairman? No meeting has yet been held, in accordance with that rule of the party which provides for the election of a Chairman by the members of the committee.

Nothing has been heard of the Star route investigation for some time, the shooting of the President having been the main topic of interest, but we are assured that the work of hunting down the thieves still continues. If any of these plunderers find their way into jail it will be a genuine surprise and a cause of much rejoicing.

The Republicans of Schuylkill county are having a regular circus, with the liveliest kind of a programme. The party is split in two and each faction has held a convention and nominated a full set of county officers. The "independent" faction, on Monday, adopted a resolution recommending the delegates to the convention of 1882 to secure the nomination of Charles S. Wolfe for governor.

The Reading R. R. Company's affairs are in a bad a state as ever, owing to the fact that the proposed scheme of President Bond for the reorganization of the Reading railroad has been rejected by the syndicate of banks relied on to purchase the four per cent. bonds. It is also stated that large holders of the junior securities of the Reading railroad have refused to accept Bond's scheme, and the general mortgage holders are demanding the overdue and unpaid interest. Stories of a threatened foreclosure are circulating. This is most unfortunate for the stockholders.

Since the adjournment of the last Grand Jury in St. Louis on the 14th ult., which left twenty six murder cases on the docket, there have occurred nine deliberate, cold blooded murders, three homicides, and thirty-five cases of assault with intent to kill. The people of the city have, very naturally, become indignant, and one of the leading papers states very distinctly that if the officers of the law do not take immediate steps to prevent crime and punish offenders, the lamp posts will be ornamented with the corpses of some of these red-handed murderers. No other city in the Union can show such a deplorable criminal list and the wrath and indignation of the citizens is not to be wondered at.

The statesman known as Wood-pulp Miller, recently chosen Senator by some of the New York legislators, it is now claimed was not legally elected. Some of the half-breed organs are growing unhappy over the chance that he may be rejected by the Senate. The constitution provides that an United States Senator must be elected by a majority of the members of both houses of the State legislature. There was not a majority of the Senate present when Miller was declared elected. If Miller were a Democrat all the organs of the Republican party would cry aloud against the enormity of his being admitted to a seat in the Senate. As it is they consider it shocking that even a doubt should be raised against Miller's eligibility.

The Bloomsburg COLUMBIAN insists that Judge Jere Black "is now and always has been a Republican."—Philadelphia Times.

Lieut. Flipper, the colored officer of the army, whose adventures at West Point are familiar to all readers of newspapers, has been detected in embezzling some $1700 of government funds, received by him as Commissary of his regiment at Fort Davis. The money, which was in the form of checks, was found on the person of Lucy Smith the colored cook. Flipper was arrested and placed in the guard house and the woman sent to jail. The three colored men sent to West Point have turned out badly; one failed to pass examination. Whittaker mutilated himself to gain sympathy and was court martialed, and now Flipper is found to be a thief. If these are the best specimens of the "nation's wards," let us have no more West Point cadets of their race.

JUDGE BLACK'S LOYALTY.

In the Philadelphia Press of last Friday, is a very interesting interview with Judge Joseph Holt, President Buchanan's Secretary of War, after Floyd, and subsequently Judge Advocate General during the war. Judge Holt fully and completely corroborates Judge Black's statements and declares that Stanton, Black and himself were of the same mind as regards the defending of the forts and protecting of other property of the federal government. He further declares that Mr. Buchanan was thoroughly loyal though anxious to avoid a war. Judge Holt, as is well known, was a Republican and opposed to Judge Black not only politically but personally, there having been no intercourse between the two men subsequent to the trial of the conspirators following the death of Lincoln. His corroboration of Judge Black's allegations will possess great weight with those who were inclined to doubt the accuracy of the Judge's words. It was popularly believed that Judge Holt was dead, so completely had he retired from public view and his reappearance at this time give his statements a peculiarly strong effect. It is very much to be hoped that the Press will publish all this interesting matter in pamphlet form. There can be no doubt that the book would have a large sale.

The Threats of Lynching Guiteau.

The American people owe it to themselves to frown down the foolish and excitable people who talk about making our nation's capital the theatre for a disgraceful scene of lawlessness in the eyes of all mankind. Guiteau, even more than Wilkes Booth, because this is a time of peace, has weakened our people's faith in the sufficiency of the safeguards which reason, patriotism, and respect for the will of the majority have been supposed to throw around the person of the Chief Magistrate of this Republic. It will add to this feeling of insecurity, and to the sense of shame and disappointment which mingles with it, if it is demonstrated that the government, the inherent and unexerted strength of which could not prevent the crime of Guiteau, cannot by its exerted strength properly punish him and save him from murder by a mob. Shall a pack of fools be allowed to further disgrace this great Republic by making its Capital the scene of the rough justice of a tribe of savages or a camp of pioneers beyond the limits of law and the influences of civilization? Shall the wretch who has sought to murder our President be made also the occasion of putting this disgrace upon us? The thinking, law-abiding people of America say no, and it is time that the expression of their opinion had begun to silence this talk about lynching in the Capital of the Republic.—Wilmington Every Evening.

DEATH OF HENDRICK B. WRIGHT.

The veteran Congressman, Hendrick Bradley Wright, died at his home in Wilkes Barre on Friday morning last, aged 73 years.

He was born in Plymouth, Luzerne County, Pa., on April 24, 1808. He pursued the usual classical and mathematical studies at Dickinson's College, afterward studied law, and was admitted to the bar of Luzerne County on Nov. 8, 1831. During the following ten years he devoted himself to his profession. In 1841 he was elected to the Pennsylvania Legislature, and was re-elected in 1842.

He was instrumental in securing the passage of the stay law of 1842, and in connection with Judge Elwell, of Columbia, in abolishing the imprisonment of poor debtors.

In 1843 the nomination of State Senator was tendered him, but he declined it, and was again elected to the House. Upon the opening of the session he was chosen Speaker. He was a delegate at large to the Democratic National Convention which met in Baltimore in 1844. In 1852 he was elected to Congress, and was renominated in 1854, but was defeated by the Hon. H. M. Fuller. In 1861 he was nominated by both parties, and was, of course, elected. After that he wrote two works, one a "Practical Treatise on Labor," the other "Historical Sketches of Plymouth,', his native town. He was once more the Democratic candidate for Congressman at large in 1872, and, being endorsed by the Workingmen's Convention, ran several thousand votes ahead of the ticket. In 1873 he was Chairman of the State Central Committee, and conducted a vigorous campaign. Mr. Wright was nominated for Congress in 1876, in the Luzerne district, and was elected by 1,456 majority. Renominated in 1878, he obtained a majority of 2,494. In 1880 the Democrats of his district nominated a straight-out party candidate and Mr. Wright ran on the National ticket, but was overwhelmingly defeated.

His political career ended on the 4th of March, this year, and he retired from public life after thirteen years of service in the state and national legislatures, embraced in a period of forty years.

On April 21, 1835, he was married to Mary Ann Bradley Robinson, daughter of John W. Robinson, and grand-daughter of Col. Zebulon Butler, who commanded the American forces at the battle of Wyoming, on July 3, 1778. Mrs. Wright died on Sept. 8, 1871.

He had suffered for some months with dropsy complicated with other diseases. Col. Wright was charitable and warm-hearted—a true friend of the poor. He had long been an advocate of the rights of the workingman, and while at times wrong in his views, was always sincere. He will be missed by the poor of his city who had for years never asked aid of him in vain. A meeting of the Luzerne County bar was held on Saturday and resolutions were adopted expressive of sorrow at the death of an old and valued member. The funeral took place on Monday and the services were conducted by Rt. Rev. Bishop Stevens, assisted by Rev. H. E. Hayden.

ANOTHER INDIAN MASSACRE.

Despatches from Fort Grant, New Mexico, announce the dismal tidings that Gen. Carr's command has been attacked by White Mountain Indians and a number of soldiers killed. It was at first reported that the entire command —110 soldiers and 7 officers—had perished, but this was subsequently denied. The reservation of these savages is located about 160 miles north of Wilcox, near the line of New Mexico. The tribe numbers about 1,500 in all. They can muster about 400 warriors. This is the only tribe of Apaches which has not been whipped into subjection. They were moved in 1876 into the San Carlos reservation, but were recalled and returned to their old hunting grounds, where they have been ever since.

The attack was commenced by Gen. Carr's Indian scouts and the news of the massacre were brought on by Indian runners. An ample force of infantry, cavalry and artillery has been sent to Fort Apache. This fort is 210 miles from Tucson, by wagon road. The country is mountainous and full of canyons suitable for ambushing and surprising an enemy. The mountains are covered with pine and other timber, and streams of running water abound. In fact it is the best timbered and watered section of the territory. There are many strongholds in the mountains in which a mere handful of determined men could successfully resist the advance of a hundred times their number. The Apache country is settled almost entirely by Mormons, and it is reported that there is an understanding between them and the Indians.

There is great excitement at Tucson and much indignation is expressed at the conduct of Indian Agent Tiffany. He has studiously denied that there was any danger of trouble, and repeatedly asserted that none of the agency Indians were off the reservation. It is claimed by those well informed that so large a body of Indians could not have been absent without the knowledge of the agent, and had he informed the military authorities of the fact the massacre would doubtless have been averted. The White Mountain Apaches are the most warlike, and have always been considered superior to any other branch of the numerous subdivisions of the great Apache nation. A general outbreak of the Apaches is feared and as these number some 800 warriors the trouble assumes grave proportions.

There seems to be no good reason to believe that such frightful occurrences will not take place from year to year, so long as Indians exist in the West.

Heretofore it has been urged by friends of the red men, that the corruption and frauds committed by agents had impelled them to acts of violence. In this instance there appears to have been no cause whatever for the outbreak, except the bloodthirsty and revengeful passions of the savages. The Indian business has always been mismanaged by the government and probably always will be. Massacre will follow massacre, unless indeed the hardy frontiersmen should organize in large numbers and devote themselves to the extermination of Indians wherever found.

This action might do away with the Indian Department, but it would save hundreds of lives and give needed rest to the borders.

Dyspepsia, Constipation, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, Chills and Fever, Headache, Colic, Depression of Spirits, Sour Stomach, Heartburn, Piles, etc.

Tonic, Alterative and Cathartic!

Simmons Liver Regulator, purely vegetable, is the medicine generally used in the South to arouse the torpid Liver to healthy action.

It acts with extraordinary power and efficacy on the liver and kidneys.

The action of the Regulator is free from nausea or griping. It is most effective in starting the secretions of the Liver, causing the bile to act as a cathartic. When there is an excess of bile in the Stomach, the Regulator is an active purge; after the removal of the bile it will regulate the bowels and impart vigor and health to the whole system.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT

"What will TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT cure?" asks the sufferer from a multitude of diseases. We answer: It will remove from the system the active cause of most of the diseases that flesh is heir to. It won't mend a broken limb, nor close a bullet hole; but it may be profitably used in stomachic diseases. It will do no one any harm, and may do much good. Try it and see if it won't suit your case.

In compliance with the proclamation of Gov. Hoyt, issued on Saturday last to the people of the State, inviting them to unite in prayer for the restoration to health of the President, services were held in the Presbyterian and Episcopal churches on Tuesday morning last. The proclamation was not published until Monday and many failed to see it in time to attend their respective places of worship.

Some idea of the excessive drought this summer may be obtained from the figures furnished by the U. S. Signal Service office in Philadelphia. In 1880 the rainfall in July was 7.74 inches and in August was 5.09 inches, making 12.83 inches in all. This year the total rainfall of July was .94 of an inch and of August 1.18, making the diminutive total of 2.12 inches, a decrease of 10.71 inches.

The present spell of hot weather has been the most intense of the season. The mercury has risen to 90° and above for several days past, and on Tuesday was 104° in the shade. The heat, too, has been of the most exhausting and depressing character and all kinds of work have been doubly irksome. No such hot weather has been known in the month of September since 1804.

The Northumberland Press says that the men quarrying stone at the base of Blue Hill, opposite that place, have struck a vein of about a foot in diameter of silver and copper ore. Some of the ore has been sent to an assayer to be tested. William Elliott owns the quarry, and Robert Lescher who owns land close by has taken an interest in the matter.

The poison of a bee sting may be forced out by pressing the barrel of a small key firmly for a minute over the wound. No wound or swelling will result. The fact itself does not cause so much surprise, as the remarkable mental power evinced by the discoverer, who could think of and try an experiment while dancing with pain and rage.

Some time since one D. F. Deibler was arrested for selling some kind of medicine without a government stamp upon the bottles. He managed to elude the vigilance of the officers and went out of the county. Recently he returned and on Thursday evening of last week was seen on the streets by Mr. Barrett, the jailor, who arrested and locked him up. The United States Marshal was notified and he sent a deputy here who took Deibler to Williamsport and lodged him in jail.

A lady has discovered a plan to keep watermelons in their natural form and flavor for an indefinite length of time. She has successfully tried it in past seasons, and as a consequence has been able to treat her family to a watermelon supper at Christmas time. The plan is an inexpensive and simple one, and consists in giving the melon three or four coats of varnish to exclude the air. She says they not only keep from decay, but that the flavor and sweetness are retained, and when eaten at Christmas or New Year, the fruit seems to be wonderfully improved in these particulars

Many persons who suffer annually from that strange disease known as hay fever, assert that they have experienced little or no trouble this year. The Philadelphia Times mentions a belief entertained by certain prominent men of that city, that the exemption from hay fever is due to the scarcity of peaches. These gentlemen claim that whenever this fruit is scarce there is always an almost utter absence of the fever. Col. J. G. Freeze, of this town has observed the same thing and believes that it is invariably true. Such a very curious fact deserves notice.

A fellow sailing under different names has been victimizing a number of persons, mostly farmers in Blair and other counties, by pretending to buy mills, farms, &c. When a total stranger comes to your house, talks about his having a great deal of money somewhere, negotiates for a farm, mill, or other property—perhaps wants to borrow some cash, having left his pocket book somewhere, the best and quickest way is to kick him out or set your dog on him. Such fellows are all cheats and liars and belong to the same class which get you to sign agreements which turn out to be notes.

At every session of the court the constables of the several townships make regular returns that the guide posts are all up, when in fact, there is not one to every ten cross roads. A stranger in the county can scarcely drive five miles in any direction without being compelled to stop at a farm house to inquire the road. Last Monday when the constable of Mt. Pleasant made his return, Judge Elwell remarked that he was glad the guides were all up, as he had driven through that township only a few days ago, and the only thing he saw that resembled a guide board was an advertisement of Wheeler & Wilson sewing machines. There should be a guide post at every cross roads or forks of a road, and constables who do not return supervisors for not complying with the law in this respect, are equally as negligent as the supervisors.

Some of our subscribers who live in the upper end of the county, complain that they do not get their papers until several days after the date of publication. All copies to subscribers are mailed in Bloomsburg on Thursday afternoon of each week, and there is no reason why they should not be delivered, at the very latest by Saturday. Notwithstanding, it frequently happens that the papers are not received until Tuesday. The fault must be either with the carriers, or the postmasters at the office of receipt, and it should be remedied at once. We dislike to mention such instances of carelessness or neglect, but our subscribers must be protected against annoyance. If the evil complained of is not abated, stronger measures will be adopted.

Albert A. Arms, while on his way home from Sonestown on Saturday night, the 20th ult., when about one mile from Sonestown, was stopped by two masked men, who pointed a revolver at his head and demanded his money or his life—and having nothing with which to defend himself he was compelled to give up his money, about $28. Charles Steinback and Edward Remsnyder, of Sonestown, were suspected as the guilty parties, and were accordingly arrested, and at the hearing before the justice, the evidence was such as to warrant him in committing them to jail, in default of bail. We learn that the young men declare themselves innocent. We trust they are, and if so, that they will have no trouble in establishing this fact before a jury.—Sullivan Review.

Last week two young boys left their homes in Milton, without leave of parents and started west by way of the P. & E. R. R. on a Pullman palace cattle car. Inquiry, by those interested, among the boys in town about the age of the truants, revealed the existence of a society, of more than two score members between the ages of 12 and 17, who had organized for the purpose of helping each other to leave home and to put parents or other inquiring friends off the track of those who should first depart, until the last had gone. The return of the first two brought the truth to light, and an organization among the parents has since taken place, and the motto is not to spare the rod but to spoil the child—for sitting down purposes.—Miltonian.

A PORTRAIT OF DR. HOLLAND.

There is hardly a literary man in America whose writings have been more widely read than those of Dr. J. G. Holland, nor one whose name is better known among the people. It is said that nearly 600,000 copies of his books have been sold, to say nothing of the enormous sale each month of Scribner's Monthly, over which he presides as editor-in-chief. The Century Co., publishers of Scribner's (to be known as "The Century Magazine" after October,) will soon issue a portrait of Dr. Holland, which is said to be a remarkably fine likeness; it is the photograph of a life-size crayon drawing of the head and shoulders, recently made by Wyatt Eaton, and will be about the size of the original picture. It is to be offered in connection with subscriptions to The Century Magazine.

It is a very silly and useless trick to punch holes in silver coins, even if it did not depreciate the value of the coins. It does this, however, and a knowledge of the fact is about to put a stop to the punching business. The Secretary of the Treasury has decided that there is no law or resolution authorizing the redemption or exchange by his department of any coins of the United States on account of their being mutilated, but mutilated silver coins will be purchased as bullion by any mint of the United States, and it is presumed that holders of such coins can dispose of them to brokers or to dealers in like manner, in which cases, of course, their value will vary according to the amount of metal in the pieces and the current price of silver bullion. It is thought that the values of the mutilated coins will be about as follows: Dollars, 85 cents; half dollars, 35 cents; quarters, 15 cents; dimes, 5 cents.

THE MINSTRELS.

Monday night was the hottest and most uncomfortable of the season, yet in spite of this, a large audience greeted the first troupe of the season at the Opera House. The performance was a most decided disappointment. The company is weak in every way and extremely unsatisfactory. Last year, Rentz's Minstrels gave an excellent entertainment and won deserved praise. The present troupe evidently hopes to get along on last year's reputation. There was not a selection in Monday night's programme worthy of commendation, and those of the audience who waited until the fall of the curtain in the hope that something would be given to break the routine of monotonous mediocrity were the most thoroughly disappointed. Leavitt is too old a manager not to know a second-class variety show when he sees it, and there is no excuse for foisting such a lot of players upon the public.

The manager of the Opera House has done well in providing cushioned stationary seats in the front of the auditorium, and in having sufficient space left between the rows to ensure comfort. The charge was the subject of favorable comment.

The Philadelphia Press gives the following facts concerning Samuel G. Collins, who was killed on the L. & B. R. R. near this town, a few days ago:

"Mr. Collins had for three years been employed as traveling salesman by Wickersham & Co., dealers in lubricating oils, 309 Race street. He collected bills also in the interior of the State. He was 40 years of age and lived with his wife and three children, all girls, at No. 1617 Sanderson street. He left home on the 15th of last month. Mrs. Collins received the first intimation of the fate of her husband at 3 p. m. yesterday. The despatch which informed her of the sad fact had been received by the employers of Mr Collins, but contained nothing further than the bare mention of the fact that he had been killed by a train. Mrs. Collins could not believe that her husband had committed suicide, but was inclined to the belief that he had either been killed by accident or had been murdered and thrown on the track. She said that five weeks ago her husband had read her an account of a traveling salesman being murdered and his body afterward thrown on the track in order to conceal the crime. As Mr. Collins concluded reading he fell into a deep study and at last remarked: "Wasn't that terrible?" Mrs. Collins received a couple of letters from the absent husband since his last departure on August 15, the last on Sunday. In this he complained of his employers not remitting him money which was due him. This, he said, causes him to lose heart. He also stated that he hated the trip and felt before starting that he would not be able to safely go through with the journey. Reference is also made to his suffering from an affliction which he contracted during the Rebellion. The general tone of the letter is that of a man possessed of his right senses, and was written on the day that the person previously alluded to attempted suicide in the Espy Canal. Mrs. Collins also stated that her husband frequently had in his possession large sums of money and checks which he had collected for his employers."

LITERARY NOTE.

The publishers of Rev. Dr. Robinson's "Spiritual Songs for the Sunday-School" have just issued a little book containing only the hymns of that work and selling for one-half the money. It will be a most desirable supplement to the large book, greatly increasing its usefulness, and placing it within the reach of the largest mission schools. The new edition is prettily bound in flexible red cloth and costs but 20 cents. The complete tune edition, bound in stiff boards in cloth, with red edges, costs 40 cents to schools in quantities. It is said that the sales of the latter work have mounted up into the scores of thousands since its issue a year ago. (The Century Co. New York.)

A great deal of lumber passes through this place daily en route for Berwick.

Our popular merchant, Mr. M. Howell, has been enlarging his stock of goods. Mr. Howell keeps a large and fresh stock of the best goods and it is to the advantage of our people to call upon him before purchasing elsewhere. He is a square dealer, and you will be dealt with fairly and honestly.

WHY HE DIDN'T GET THE PEACHES.

Many of our readers will remember, most pleasantly, Mr. Alexander E. Miller, who was, some years ago, clerk at the Exchange Hotel in Bloomsburg. The Williamsport Gazette & Bulletin says that he "came over from Camp Garfield at Wilkes-Barre with the Twelfth regiment boys Monday evening. Just before the train pulled out from South Wilkes-Barre, the "Count" met with a little incident which he will not forget very soon. Feeling very thirsty he went over to a saloon, accompanied by a friend, to drink some lemonade. While drinking of the cooling beverage his attention was attracted to a peach tree in the yard, which was crowded with luscious-looking peaches. Feeling that he could relish a few of them, he moved out into the yard slowly, reached up to a limb, pulled it down, and was in the act of plucking a very fine peach, when a bull dog he had not noticed, sprang out of a kennel at the lower end of the garden and rushed toward him barking furiously. The "Count" being a very active man, wheeled suddenly and started for the street, going over the ground with the swiftness of a deer; the front gate of the yard was closed, but he went over this a foot higher than was necessary. Reaching the street he did not dare to stop until he drew close to the railroad, and when he halted, the first thing he did was to turn around and examine the hind side of his clothing. Finding that there was no tear he smiled, got aboard the train and told a number of the boys, quietly, where they could get some very fine peaches."

FIRE IN ESPY.

At about half past twelve o'clock on Wednesday last, Mr. Thomas Rutledge went to his home on the main street of Espy, for dinner. While preparing for the meal he noticed a thread of smoke issuing from the roof of the kitchen near the chimney. He thought a bucket of water would be sufficient to extinguish the tiny fire, but soon discovered that the flames had worked their way under the shingles and in a few moments the roof was ablaze. The fire spread with such wonderful rapidity that it was found impossible to save the building. The furniture and other property was hastily removed to a place of safety and, so far as is known, but little was lost. The house was entirely destroyed. It is thought that a spark from the chimney fell upon the roof and ignited the shingles, which were as dry as tinder from the long continued drought. Adjoining Mr. Rutledge's house and separated only by a passage of four or five feet, was the store of W. E. Dieterich, which was saved by the energetic and intelligent exertions of the citizens of Espy. The goods were removed and taken to the M. E. Church across the street. The building was only slightly damaged and the loss will not exceed $100.

The people became alarmed at the fierceness with which the flames did their work, and telegrams were sent to Bloomsburg and Danville asking aid. A mounted messenger was also sent to the former town. The Winona Hose, Rescue Hook and Ladder, and Friendship Fire Companies of Bloomsburg promptly responded and took their hose carriage, truck and engine to the scene. The fire was under control when they arrived, but all rendered such service as was available. The call for aid to Danville was countermanded, when it was seen that the fire would be confined to one building. Mr. Rutledge's building was a neat frame structure, and was very prettily and tastefully finished, the upper rooms being in oak and the lower ones in walnut. Mr Rutledge, who is superintendent of the Espy boat yard, had done much of this work with his own hands and had spared no pains in beautifying his home. He estimates his loss at about $3500, exclusive of damage to his household goods. The building was insured for $2000—$1000 in the Aetna Insurance Company and the same amount in the Royal.

There was great excitement in the village during the progress of the fire, especially among the women. Credit is due to the citizens for the vigorous and effectual manner in which they fought the flames.

Bloomsburg is getting rid of its small pox and drifting back into oblivion. There's nothing like a contagious disease to boom a town into note.—Scranton Republican.

Nothing, perhaps, except it may be a lot of reckless and unreliable newspaper writers, in neighboring towns, to lie about the progress and extent of the disease. The Republican scribbler rendered that kind of service for Wilkes-Barre and Bloomsburg, not long ago.

DEDICATION SERVICE IN THE UNION CHURCH AT ORANGEVILLE.

EDITOR COLUMBIAN: This highly interesting and important service was held on Thursday forenoon of last week. It consisted of two parts, the re-dedication of the church and the dedication of the memorial bell. The church, which has stood about forty-one years, has undergone a marked change. Its exterior has been modernized. In addition to all the necessary repairs, the front has been extended ten feet with an imbedded tower forty-five feet high, upon which rests a spire fifty-five feet high. The church is one of the most convenient, substantial and imposing in this section of the country. In connection with this part of the service, a very edifying sermon was preached by Rev. W. H. Gotwald, of Milton, and the church was accordingly dedicated to the worship of the Triune God. The second part of the programme was introduced by the choir singing to the tune of Phillips, some verses eulogistic of Col. H. R. Kline, who had been one of their most prominent members. The singing of these lines was solemn and impressive and affected not a few to tears. Next followed the Memorial Address, by Rev. D. J. Waller, Jr. In his remarks he gave a historical sketch of the bell from its primitive stage down to the present time, and showed that, as the bell was for the community, so Mr. Kline, as a public benefactor, was a servant and friend to all; and while his voice was now silent in the the choir, his bell would ever call the public to the sanctuary for divine worship. In the latter part of his discourse he beautifully traced out the analogy between the bell and the person it is designed to commemorate, and in well chosen words dedicated the bell to the use of God's sanctuary and the memory of Col. H. R. Kline.

The bell was cast at the large bell foundry of Vanduzen & Tift, Cincinnati, Ohio It is made of pure bell metal and has all the modern improvements. The bell and its mountings weigh about 1300 lbs. Upon being duly tested, it has given general satisfaction in every particular. It is said to be one of the best bells in the State. It bears the inscription in raised letters, "In memory of Col. H. R. Kline, by friends, 1881."

This bell was procured solely by contributions from his friends and relatives, who from various parts have been sending in liberal contributions. As soon as all the contributions are in, there will be hung in the belfry a frame containing a sketch of Mr. Kline and a list of the contributors.

A DANGEROUS COUNTERFEIT.

There is a dangerous counterfeit in circulation, purporting to be "Walnut Leaf Hair Restorer." The strongest evidence of the great value of "Walnut Leaf Hair Restorer" is the fact that parties knowing its efficacy try to imitate it. Each bottle of the genuine has a "fac simile" of the signature of "D. E. Becker"—the manufacturer—blown in the glass; and the "restorer" is as clear and harmless as water, while it possesses all the component properties necessary to restore life, vigor, growth, and color to the hair. BARBED WIRE.
FENCES

are undoubtedly the cheapest and most durable fence made, is not effected by fire, wind or flood, does not cause snow drifts, takes fewer posts and stock cannot push it down. Our wire is four pointed, is made of two strands of number 12 best galvanized steel wire twisted together just enough to allow for contraction and expansion in Summer and Winter, barbs are fastened every seven inches. The use of barbed wire is no longer an experiment, as last year over one hundred thousand miles were put up. We believe our wire to be the best and cheapest now manufactured because it is made of the best steel wire and runs 15 feet to the pound having the greatest strength and visibility with the least weight of any made. Put up on spools of about 100 rods weighing about 100 pounds. Price per pound 11 cents by the spool, less quantities 11½ cents per pound.

The Farmer's Laboratory.

The coming farmer has got to be a scientific man, and the sooner the matter is squarely faced the better for him and all his folks. The capabilities of soil are as important as the capabilities of the teams selected to work them; and the farmer who is a good judge of horses and a poor judge or no judge at all of his land, is in a sorry predicament. There are many farmers who cannot read or who have never heard a discussion on soils, who know nothing about phosphates, nitrogen or potash, but nevertheless have never yet failed to work any land which has been put into their care with perfect success. Notwithstanding their want of education, they have been close observers, with a good memory and have stored away in the recesses of their brain, never to be put into words, but only to be brought out in their own practice, a fund of useful knowledge as profound as the most learned professor ever dreamed of. These men are scientific farmers in the true sense of the term; yet they cannot express themselves in any mode only by example. Precept is beyond their powers. They never could become teachers because it would take a lifetime to show what they know, and their pupils would be superannuated before they were ready to graduate.

These home-made scientific farmers have no apparatus to perform such experiments as terra culture calls for; no chemicals with which to test the many fallacies laid before the rural public; but only a few little grains of common sense which in a pure soil would grow such a terribly sound crop of experience. And here lies their safety; they do not know enough to be misled by any of the many plausible theories offered them; they cannot understand them and their brain remains unmuddled. Blessed be ignorance when so eminently useful. There is a class of farmers coming to the front, however, who are possessed with a desire for knowledge, who have learned that in this year 1881, "knowledge is power." These men have not the technical knowledge to enable them to use philosophical apparatus, or to cull samples, or to create combinations from the constituents of the soil on their farms, and are thus held back from much practical knowledge absolutely necessary to their prosperity. To this class I wish to offer a few ideas, which, if pursued, will prove extremely interesting as well as profitable.

Soils are extremely various, ranging from clay so pure as to make the best of brick, down to sand so pure as to travel to and fro with every wind. Every kind of soil when acted upon by water (rain) acts as a filter. Clay allows but little of the mineral components to pass, while sand suffers all to descend to a certain depth. The various mixtures of clay and sand, the basis of all soils, arrest the fertilizing principles near the surface, and surface-rooted plants will find their food there when they need it. A sandy soil allows the strength of manure to wash deeper, consequently deep-rooted plants must be placed there. The exact place of retardation of the strength of manure in any given soil, then, is a matter of great importance. Without this knowledge crops may be put in so contrary to their requirements as to cause a general failure over the whole farm; while with it, by a mere shifting to congenial fields, every crop would have been successful.

Salt the cows.

Cows should receive all the salt they want. A very good plan is to make an artificial salt-lick by placing ground or coarse salt in troughs accessible to the cows when they want to get it; or by placing larger pieces of ordinary rock salt where the cows may lick at them when they feel inclined. Most people salt their cows about once a week, and then give them a pretty good dose. This is, of course, better than not to give any, but its incongruity and unfitness will better be appreciated perhaps by the dairyman himself if he will try taking his own salt in the same way; say on Saturday or Sunday morning, he should eat a teaspoonful of salt, and let that do for the week. A cow isn't a human being, but physiology and common sense are pretty much the same, whether they are applied to man or other animals, in the matter of alimentation and the ordinary functions of digestion and so on. If cows are fed in the stable every day they should each have a good teaspoonful of salt every morning in the trough, or a piece of rock salt may lie in the trough to be licked when she wants it. If cows are not stabled every day or two a box of salt should be placed in the field, or at the milking place, so as to be accessible any time when the cow feels like having a lick.

Food for Growing Fowls.

The Poultry Yard says that food for young and growing fowls must, to obtain good growth, be rich in nitrates and phosphates. Corn meal contains much oil, which, before it can be appropriated by the system, has to go through a number of chemical changes, consequently it is too rich a food to be fed exclusively to very young chickens. Coarse oatmeal mixed with milk, is very nutritious food. Cracked or whole wheat is also excellent and the two mixed in equal parts give, undoubtedly, the best grain food we can obtain, with perhaps, the exception of rice. Milk curd is very nutritious, and should always be given them when it can be had. If insect food is not abundant, and milk or curd not obtainable, feed fresh meat boiled and minced. After the chickens have got a good start in feathers, corn meal can be used as the general grain food, as oatmeal and wheat (though the best) are too expensive for constant use. For vegetables, boiled potatoes, mashed and mixed with wheat bran, are excellent.

Carrots as Food for Stock.

In many respects, carrots are preferable to any kind of roots raised in this country for stock. A given weight contains a larger proportion of flesh, fat and milkforming principles. They impart a desirable color and no undesirable odor or flavor to milk. They are rich in sugar and are therefore relished by young stock. When cooked, they are readily eaten by pigs and poultry. As food for horses they are very far superior to any roots grown. Many horsemen in the cities go to great pains to procure a supply of carrots for their stables. They improve the digestion of horses, keep up their condition, and impart a gloss to the hair. Carrots are almost the only kind of roots that can be fed to horses with advantage.

A brother arose in a weekly prayer meeting in New Jersey, and said: "Brethren, when I consider the shortness of life I feel as if I might be taken away suddenly, like a thief in the night."

"Is there much water in the cistern, Biddy?" inquired a gentleman of his servant girl. "It's full on the bottom," she replied, "but there's none at all on the top."

Table Etiquette.

PUBLISHED FOR THE BENEFIT OF FOREIGNERS.

Macaroni should be cut into short pieces and should be eaten with an even, graceful motion, and absorbed by the yard.

Stones in cherries or other fruit should not be placed upon the tablecloth, but slid quietly and unostentatiously into the pocket of your neighbor or noiselessly tossed under the table.

If one of the gentlemen should drop a raw oyster into his bosom and he should have trouble in fishing it out, do not make facetious remarks about it, but assist him to find it, laughing heartily all the time.

If you strike a worm in your fruit do not call attention to it by mashing it with the nearest fork. This is not only uncouth, but it is regarded in the best society as blase and exceedingly vice versa.

If you cannot accept an invitation to dinner do not write your regrets on the back of a pool check with a blue pencil. This is not regarded as ricochet.

A simple note to your host, informing him that your washer woman refuses to relent, is sufficient.

In drinking wine, when you get to the bottom of your glass, do not throw your head back and draw in your breath like the exhaust of a bathtub in order to get the last drop, as it engenders a feeling of the most depressing melancholy among the guests.

After eating a considerable amount, do not rise and unbuckle your vest strap in order to get more room, as it is not exactly au fait and deshabille.

If, by mistake, you drink out of your finger bowl, laugh heartily and make some facetious remark, which will change the course of conversation and renew the friendly feeling among the members of the party.

If you happen to drop gravy on your knife blade back near the handle do not run the blade down your throat to remove the gravy, as it might injure your epiglottis, and it is not embonpoint, any way.

When you are at dinner do not take up a raw oyster on your fork and playfully ask your host if it is dead. Remarks about death are in very poor taste.

Pears should be held by the stems and peeled gently but firmly, not as though you were skinning a dead horse. It is not bon ton.

Oranges are held on a fork while being pulled, and the facetious style of squirting the juice into the eyes of the hostess is now au revoir.

The new edition of Webster's dictionary contains the principles of pronunciation, rules for spelling, prefixes and suffixes, pronuncing vocabularies, quotations, words, phrases, proverbs and colloquial expressions from the Greek, Latin and modern foreign languages rendered into English, with a table of money, weight, and measure of the principal commercial countries in the world, including gold and silver coinage. A complete English grammar is found in this dictionary. This book has been compiled for every business, profession, teacher, student, and family. Accompanying the book is a complete index, running through all the letters of the alphabet, which are stamped on the lid so that by turning to any letter of the beginning of a word you can open the book in an instant, thus saving much time and labor.

The Earliest Torpedo Boat.

A naval officer who is well versed in such matters, says that the earliest torpedo boat ever invented was that designed by David Bushkell, one of the officers of the American army during the Revolution. The vessel was shaped like a watch case, and loaded so as to stand on its edge in the water. It was intended to be a submarine affair, operated by a man inside, who by turning a crank, kept it in motion. Attached to the machine was a box containing 150 pounds of powder, and a clock work arrangement so contrived as to explode the powder at a given time. This box had a chain attached to it, at the end of which was a large pin. The idea was to run under the bottom of a vessel, drive the pin into her, then cast the box loose from the torpedo boat and get as far off as possible. The fleet of Lord Howe was at that time lying in New York harbor, and Sergeant Ezra Lee agreed to make a trial of the new invention by attempting to blow up one of the royal vessels. He was placed in the machine, and ran it down the bay, and under the bottom of Lord Howe's flagship, the Eagle. He then attempted to drive the pin into her bottom, but a heavy sheathing of copper prevented; and after staying under the ship for several hours he cast loose the powder package and returned to the city. It is probable that if this attempt had been successful it would have advanced torpedo warfare a hundred years.

A gentleman at Elmira, N. Y., recently tested the notion prevalent among nurserymen that if on the longest day of the year, June 21, the bark of a tree is entirely peeled off, no injury will be done to the tree, but that a new bark will immediately grow thereon. He had an old and worthless apple tree, from which he stripped the bark on the 21st of June, and to his surprise the leaves did not even wilt, but grew right along, and the tree is now growing a fine bark. It is explained that about that time in June the sap of the tree does not lie immediately next to the bark, but is confined in a delicate inner bark that forms. Thus peeling the bark off, at the same time, does not deprive the tree of the sap.

A TRAVELER'S STORY.

After spending months at European and American watering places and thousands of dollars looking for health, I returned home disheartened and wretched. I had consulted the best physicians and traveled far and near without benefit and expected to die. A friend urged a trial of Parker's Ginger Tonic. Three bottles and careful diet have worked wonders and brought me excellent health and spirits, and you may publish my experience for the benefit of similar sufferers.—A Cincinnati lady.

The boys are laughing about an operator in the Galveston office. He took a written message from old Mose, and after painfully scrutinizing it said, "You must write it plainer, uncle; I can't make head or tail of it." "Never mind boss, jess send it off as it is. My boy Jim knows de ole man's handwrite. Hit's a shame your fadder nebber sent yer to school so you cud read writin."

The Chicago Times says: "New York papers disclose that mussels are destroying the oysters." The muscles most destructive to oysters, however, are attached to the New York jaw.
